

The "7 Mountains of Society" (or 7 Mountains of Influence) is a framework within evangelical Christianity—specifically the New Apostolic Reformation—identifying seven key cultural spheres that shape society. Believers are called to occupy and influence these "mountains" with their values.

The seven spheres are:

- Religion: Influencing spiritual life and church doctrine.
- Family: Shaping societal morals, marriage structures, and the home.
- Education: Shaping the worldview of the next generation.
- Government: Influencing laws, justice systems, and civil leadership.
- Media: Controlling news, broadcasting, and public information flow.
- Arts & Entertainment: Influencing culture through film, music, sports, and leisure.
- Business: Shaping economics, commerce, and wealth creation.
